The osteopathy program Canada has been waiting for — the first of its kind.

Train to become an osteopathic manual practitioner

Study the principles and practices of osteopathy — a growing profession that uses a manual therapy approach to patient care, treating a variety of injuries, illnesses and conditions.

Graduate with 1,000+ hours of supervised clinical experience

This is the only osteopathy degree in Canada that meets the World Health Organization's Type 1 standard of 1,000 hours of supervised clinical practice. You will:

- Start working with patients in Year 1 under supervision in Sheridan's community clinic.
- Practice alongside peers in our multidisciplinary student clinic.
- Network with practitioners during three work-integrated learning opportunities in a variety of clinical settings.

A direct path into the growing field of osteopathy

Previous health science education is recommended but not required to enter this degree. If you've already completed a health science degree, you may be eligible to start in the second year of this program after completing three bridging courses.

Career opportunities

Graduates of Sheridan's Honours Bachelor of Science – Osteopathy degree will be highly skilled osteopathic manual practitioners prepared to help patients manage their health and well-being. Practitioners can choose from a variety of career paths, though most choose to work in private practice, in multidisciplinary clinics, or with sports teams.
