OUTLINE
(recommended but not evaluated)

Introduction: Many people either go right to college after highschool or take the year off to work and travel. The best choice I believe is to take the year off.

Point 1 - Kids
- Financial responsibility
- Babysitters
- Make money

Point 2 - Need a break
- Travel
- Work to pay for school
- Have some fun before crunch time

Conclusion: Some people are not ready for the stresses of college after dealing with highschool and need that year to get everything figure out.

FINAL DRAFT

Many students have to make the big decision to either go right to college after highschool or take the year off to work or even travel. In my opinion the best choice is to take the year off and here are a few reasons why.

First is kids. The way society is now, many highschool students have kids which includes a lot of financial responsibility comes with it. Some may not have the parents support to help them, so they end up doing it on their own. Babysitters sometimes hard to come by so some end up on welfare to try help the situation so with all this money needs to be made to support current situation, and then later on move towards going to college for a better life for them and their kids.
Next is they just need a break. Majority of students start working in highschool and want to try to pay some of school on their own, with maybe parent's help. Some dealt with the stress of highschool and not ready for sports or even just passing to graduate on time. With all that college be ten times the amount of work and they may be not ready for that commitment. Some students travel maybe to different island or even back there to there home if they migrate from a different country. Just have some fun before hitting the books, a year later so later.

In conclusion some students to easily say are just not ready for college right after highschool some just need to that year to think and unwind and some may even decide college is just not for them right now and they want to work for awhile.
