FINAL DRAFT

Many students go through highschool without a clear goal by the end, they decide to take a year off to evaluate their lives and decide which career would be best for them. I think that this way of thinking is incorrect. There are a few reasons why people should proceed to college immediately after highschool. They include procrastination due to the fact they are already making money, life evaluation being done in school, and time. The following essay will outline why going to college after highschool is the best course of action.

Firstly, taking a year off to work is not the best choice. A lot can happen within a year while working. People may get accustomed to earning money and put off going to college for even longer. They will get into the mindset, that they will think, "Hey, I'll take off another year to make more money and then go to college." They will continue to procrastinate. They may.

They may even get promotions that they view acceptable and decide they don't need to attend post secondary because they are already making a decent amount, or so they think. Hence, by taking time off to work, they will inevitably procrastinate for more than a year because they are too busy making money or they got promoted.

Secondly, some people are still confused in their final year of high school, so they decide to take a year off to evaluate. This is also a mistake. True, mistakes should be made because they are young and have that luxury but time is fleeting. Mistakes should be made early and the best time is during college.

In my experience, I took a year off to evaluate and went to college afterwards. During that time, I realized that what I wanted to do was not business. If I went straight to college, I would have figured that out a lot sooner.

Therefore, in my opinion, people should just dive in and think about their lives while continuing education. It's the best way.

Finally, I touched on this topic earlier and that topic is time. From my experience, I took too much time to figure out my life goals and before I knew it, so much time passed.
If I were to attend post secondary immediately, the time I used could have been shortened tremendously to where I can now in life. I would have figured things out much quicker and wasted less time. When we are young, we think that we have a lot of time to decide but in reality, time goes by incredibly fast and we should make the most of it.

In conclusion, taking a year or more off after high school, in my opinion, is not the best decision. Many factors apply to procrastinating to continue education, being non productive while contemplating life goals and losing valuable time in the process. I think that no matter what people decide, they should do it in college while being exposed to professors, students, and advisors. It would be the wisest decision.
